UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

ALL MISSION INDIAN HOUSING

vs.

BEN MAGANTE, JR. And CATHERINE
JEWEL MAGANTE,

Defendants.

CASE NO. 06cv1678 BTM (NLS)

AMENDED ORDER DISMISSING CIVIL ACTION FOR LACK OF

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiff filed the instant complaint in unlawful detainer to recover possession of land and for damages. Plaintiff All Mission Indian Housing Authority (“AMIHA”), which describes itself as a federally-sanctioned and federally-funded Indian Housing Authority, seeks to evict Defendants from a home which AMIHA has rented to them because of Defendants’ failure to pay rent. AMIHA is organized under the authority of the federally-recognized Indian tribes which are members of AMIHA.

The Court issued an order to show cause why this case should not be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Plaintiff’s complaint claims that this Court has jurisdiction over this action pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331, 1337, and 1362. All three statutory jurisdictional grants cited by Plaintiff require that the action at issue arise under federal law, that is, they require a “federal question.” 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (“all civil actions arising under the

1 Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States”); 28 U.S.C. § 1337 (“any civil action or 2 proceeding arising under any Act of Congress regulating commerce or protecting trade and 3 commerce against restraints and monopolies”); 28 U.S.C. § 1362 (“all civil actions, brought 4 by an Indian tribe or band . . . wherein the matter in controversy arises under the 5 Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States”).

6 In responding to the Court’s order to show cause, Plaintiff has relied upon All Mission 7 Indian Housing Authority v. Silvas, 680 F. Supp. 330 (C.D. Cal. 1987), which found that an 8 eviction by an Indian Housing Authority was a dispute arising under the federal common law 9 and, thus, was properly within the subject matter jurisdiction of the federal courts.¹ Plaintiff 10 argues that both Round Valley Indian Housing Authority v. Hunter, 907 F. Supp. 1343 (N.D.
11 Cal. 1995), and Minnesota Chippewa Tribal Housing Corp. v. Reese, 978 F. Supp. 1258 (D.
12 Minn. 1997), which were cited by the Court in its order to show cause for the proposition that 13 federal courts lacked subject matter jurisdiction over similar actions, are wrongly decided.
14 Plaintiff further argues that the federal common law governing landlord-tenant relations for 15 Indian reservations should be developed from the statutory skeleton put in place by the 1996
16 passage of the Native American Housing Assistance and Self-Determination Act 17 (“NAHASDA”). Plaintiff claims that NAHASDA provides the essential features of the uniform 18 national law that Congress wishes to be applied in all federally-funded Indian housing 19 matters.

20 21 II. DISCUSSION

22 It is undisputed that Plaintiff’s complaint in unlawful detainer is a landlord-tenant issue, 23 which is generally a matter of state law. See Hunter, 907 F. Supp. at 1348 (citing Powers 24 v. United States Postal Service, 671 F.2d 1041, 1045 (7th Cir. 1982) (“Federal common law

26 ¹ Plaintiff has also submitted an amicus brief filed by the Attorney General on behalf 27 of the U.S. Department of Housing & Urban Development in All Mission Indian Housing 28 Authority v. Castello, Civil No. 81-997-LTL (C.D. Cal.). According to Plaintiff, Castello was a companion case to Silvas and a copy of the amicus brief was supplied to Judge Tashima as an exhibit in Silvas. However, the Court has not considered the brief because it was filed in 1981 and, counsel’s assurances notwithstanding, there is no evidence that the Government’s position on this issue has not changed in the intervening 26 years.

1 of landlord and tenant does not exist.”)). The fact that Plaintiff’s claim to the land at issue is 2 ultimately derived from the federally-defined land rights of its member Indian tribes does not 3 convert the present controversy into one that presents a federal question. Cf. Oneida Indian 4 Nation v. County of Oneida, 414 U.S. 661, 676 (1974) (“a controversy in respect of lands has 5 never been regarded as presenting a Federal question merely because one of the parties 6 to it has derived his title under an act of Congress”) (quoting Shulthis v. McDougal, 255 U.S.
7 561, 570 (1912)). While “the Federal Government has shown a continuing solicitude for the 8 rights of the Indians in their land,” Oneida, 414 U.S. at 684 (Rehnquist, J., concurring), that 9 special interest does not grant jurisdiction to the federal courts over all legal disputes 10 occurring on a federally-recognized Indian reservation. C.f. Reese, 978 F. Supp. at 1267 11 (“Although the federal government has long had a special relation to the American Indian, 12 there is no jurisdiction in the federal courts to hear a case merely because an Indian . . . is 13 a party to it.” (citations omitted).)

14 Similarly, a standard landlord-tenant dispute cannot be said to arise under federal law 15 simply because the landlord is the housing authority for a number of federally-recognized 16 Indian tribes that is charged with utilizing federal funds to provide subsidized housing to tribal 17 members. The regulatory scheme detailed in NAHASDA, while providing a comprehensive 18 framework for governance of the use of these federal funds, does not provide a federal cause 19 of action for a simple eviction proceeding, even one brought by an entity whose work is 20 authorized by NAHASDA. The section of NAHASDA quoted by Plaintiff in its response, 25 21 U.S.C. § 4137, does specify certain rules regarding evictions that must be incorporated into 22 all leases, including the tenant’s right to examine any relevant documents or records related 23 to the eviction. However, NAHASDA does not address the issue of where such eviction 24 proceedings should occur. The Court does not believe that Congress’s silence on this 25 subject is evidence of its belief that federal jurisdiction for such actions had already been 26 clearly established, especially since the Hunter decision had already announced that such 27 jurisdiction did not exist by the time of NAHASDA’s passage.

28 Congress’s failure to specifically provide for jurisdiction in federal courts within

1 NAHASDA cannot simply be attributed to oversight. Around the time of NAHASDA's 2 passage, the federal government's Indian housing programs included nearly 73,000 housing 3 units for members of the more than 500 federally-recognized Indian tribes. See U.S.
4 Department of Housing and Urban Development "A Picture of Subsidized Households - 5 1998" (available at <http://www.huduser.org/datasets/assthsg/stateddata98/HUD4US3.TXT>).
6 The budget for the federally-subsidized Indian housing programs was nearly $750 million in 7 fiscal year 2003. See Remarks Prepared for Delivery by Secretary Mel Martinez to the 8 National Congress of American Indians on Feb. 24, 2003 (available at 9 <http://www.hud.gov/news/speeches/ncai.cfm>). If Congress had intended that the federal 10 courts exercise jurisdiction over all disputes arising from these housing arrangements and, 11 in this way, act as stewards over the far-reaching programs the Government's substantial 12 investment has generated, it would have indicated as much.

13 After all, Congress is certainly capable of clearly indicating its desire to grant 14 jurisdiction to the federal courts over classes of suits that would not otherwise belong there 15 because they simply involve issues of state law. For example, in 1989, Congress passed 16 the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act and established the 17 Resolution Trust Corporation ("RTC"), which was charged with containing, managing, and 18 resolving failed savings associations in the wake of the savings and loan crisis of the 1980s.
19 See Pub. L. No. 101-73, § 101, 103 Stat. 183, 187 (1989). In order to facilitate the work of 20 the RTC, Congress specifically provided for federal jurisdiction: "Notwithstanding any other 21 provision of law, any civil action, suit, or proceeding to which the [Resolution Trust] 22 Corporation is a party shall be deemed to arise under the laws of the United States, and the 23 United States district courts shall have original jurisdiction over such action, suit, or 24 proceeding." Id., § 501(l)(1), codified at 12 U.S.C. § 1441a(l)(1). Thus, actions involving 25 purely state law questions, like routine collection and foreclosure cases, could be brought in, 26 or removed to, federal court if the RTC became involved. And, although the "already 27 overburdened" federal courts may have questioned the wisdom of exercising jurisdiction over 28 cases that did not involve "any particular federal substantive interest in [their] adjudication,"

1 the statutory grant of authority was clear. Resolution Trust Corp. v. Nernberg, 3 F.3d 62, 68 2 n.3 (3d Cir. 1993).

3 In the absence of similarly clear statutory direction, the Court does not believe that 4 Congress intended that the federal courts would have jurisdiction over every eviction from 5 an Indian housing unit. Such evictions could include those brought for repeated violations 6 of miscellaneous lease provisions governing things like noise, or even landscaping 7 requirements. In addition, if this Court had jurisdiction to decide landlord-tenant disputes 8 arising from Indian Housing Authority leases, there would be no reason why an Indian tribal 9 member could not bring suit in federal court for performance under such a lease, in addition 10 to any tribal landlord. Plaintiff's argument supposes that if an Indian Housing Authority 11 tenant, deemed to be defaulting under his lease, should leave on vacation and return to find 12 that his belongings have been moved out of his home and a new family has been moved in, 13 the tenant's suit for repossession would be appropriately brought in federal court. Likewise, 14 the federal courts would be the appropriate venue for a lessee's suit to be placed in 15 possession of a leased home if his Indian Housing Authority landlord fails to deliver the 16 property at the start of the lease. In the absence of clear congressional authorization, 17 everyday disputes over lease arrangements on Indian land cannot be thought properly within 18 the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States.

19 As the Court has determined that there is no statutory grant of jurisdiction to hear the 20 present matter, the only question remaining is whether Plaintiff's complaint asserts a cause 21 of action that is cognizable under federal common law. Unlike the suit in Oneida, 414 U.S.
22 661, which was brought upon the Oneida Indians' claim of aboriginal ownership of a vast 23 area of land which had been ceded to the State of New York in 1795, there is no dispute in 24 this case that the land in question is indeed tribal land. Thus, Plaintiff's complaint does not 25 assert the Indian tribal right of possession, as against all others, that is conferred and 26 protected by federal common law. The present complaint asserts the AMIHA's right to 27 possession of tribal land as against its own tribes' members, which arises out of a lease 28 arrangement, and nothing more. See Reese, 978 F. Supp. at 1266 ("Unlike the Oneida

1 Indians, there is no similar assertion by the [tribal housing corporation] that the nature and 2 source of its right to possession is dependent upon Federal law.”).

3 The Ninth Circuit, in an opinion which was subsequently withdrawn, and thus is no 4 longer precedential, explained that actions like the one presently before the Court do not 5 “require an interpretation of [a] federal right” and, thus, do not arise under federal law.
6 Owens Valley Indian Housing Authority v. Turner, 185 F.3d 1029 (9th Cir. 1999), withdrawn
7 and reh'g granted, 192 F.3d 1330 (9th Cir. 1999), appeal dismissed as moot, 201 F.3d 444 8 (9th Cir. 1999). The Turner court cited with approval both Hunter, 907 F. Supp. at 1348, and 9 Reese, 978 F. Supp. at 1266. See 185 F.3d at 1033. The court agreed that, while federal 10 common law jurisdiction exists when resolution of a case requires an interpretation of an 11 Indian tribe’s federal right of possession, an unlawful detainer suit brought by an Indian 12 Housing Authority merely asserts the rights of a landlord as against its tenant, and does not 13 implicate the Indian tribe’s federally protected right to possess and exclude others from its 14 lands. Id. at 1032-33. Although the Ninth Circuit’s opinion in Owens Valley was withdrawn, 15 the Court finds the reasoning expressed therein wholly persuasive and concludes that federal 16 common law jurisdiction does not exist for the present action.

17 Plaintiff has argued that it will be left without legal recourse if federal jurisdiction does 18 not exist for this action. This is because federal statutory law precludes bringing this action 19 in state court, see 28 U.S.C. § 1360(b), and no tribal courts exist for the tribes that are 20 members of AMIHA. However, the lack of a presently-available alternative forum does not 21 provide the constitutional and statutory basis required to provide jurisdiction in federal court.
22 The Supreme Court has expressed the limited nature of the jurisdiction of the federal courts 23 clearly:

24 Federal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction. They possess only that power 25 authorized by Constitution and statute, which is not to be expanded by 26 judicial decree. It is to be presumed that a cause lies outside this limited jurisdiction, and the burden of establishing the contrary rests upon the party asserting jurisdiction.

27 Kokkonen v. Guardian Life Insurance Co. of America, 511 U.S. 375, 377 (U.S. 1994) 28 (citations omitted) (emphasis added). Plaintiff has failed to meet its burden of establishing 1 this Court's jurisdiction over the present action.

2 In addition, denying Plaintiff the forum of a federal court will not leave it without any 3 potential for recourse. The Court agrees with the view presented in the Ninth Circuit's 4 withdrawn Owens Valley opinion:

5 In matters of Indian law, federal jurisdiction does not necessarily follow from 6 the absence of state jurisdiction.

7 . . . [P]rotecting tribal sovereignty does not require providing a federal 8 forum whenever state jurisdiction is wanting. To the contrary, the Supreme 9 Court has found that the interests of tribal self-government and self-10 determination are generally best served if tribal courts preside over disputes involving Indians and arising on Indian land. . . . The interests of tribal sovereignty will be best served by the formation of tribal courts competent to hear such cases.

11 185 F.3d at 1034; accord Reese, 978 F. Supp. at 1264 (“[W]e are aware of no impediments, 12 and the Plaintiff draws none to our attention, that would preclude the [Indian] Tribe from 13 imbuing its Tribal Courts with the necessary jurisdiction and procedures to resolve unlawful 14 detainer actions that are brought by a Tribal agency against a member of the Tribe.”). The 15 tribes that have banded together to form the All Mission Indian Housing Authority can, 16 consistent with their own sovereignty, form tribal courts capable of hearing these cases.
17 Thus, a forum can exist to hear these disputes.

19 III. CONCLUSION

20 Plaintiff in this action seeks a Court order directing the United States Marshal to enter 21 upon an Indian reservation and evict Defendants from their home. Such eviction would be 22 accomplished by physical force if necessary. The Court believes that before a court orders 23 Government agents to physically remove citizens from their homes, the authority of the Court 24 to issue such an order should be clearly established. As the analysis above highlights, clarity 25 as to the propriety of this Court's exercise of jurisdiction is severely lacking.

Since the Court has found that the present action does not arise under federal law, the Court lacks jurisdiction over the matter and, accordingly, it must be DISMISSED. The Clerk is directed to enter judgment dismissing this case without prejudice.
